One day, a poor traveller set off on a journey. He walked a long distance and was tired and hungry. He sat under a tree to eat his midday meal. It consisted of rice and vegetables. Close to the tree, a woman had put up a stall to sell fried fish. She looked on while the traveller was eating his meal. When he had finished, she asked him for some money for the fried fish. The traveller protested that he had not come anywhere near the fish-stall. The woman insisted that he had enjoyed the meal because of the appetizing smell of fried fish. The woman and the traveller went before a judge who looked into the matter.

The judge said, "since the woman says the traveller enjoyed the meal because of the smell of fried fish, the traveller cannot deny the idea that while eating his food he got the smell of fried fish. Let the woman and the traveller go outside. Let the traveller hold out a coin and allow the woman to take the shadow cast by the coin." The traveller stepped out to carry out the judge's order, only to find that the woman had already gone away.
